APA Style for Electronic Sources.

I. Citing Periodic Articles Accessed Through GALILEO.

- Give the name of the author (last name first, followed by first initial(s), date of publication in parentheses, the title of the article without quotation marks, capitalizing only the first word, the periodical name in italics followed by the month or season (no date because already given), and page numbers if given. (Sometimes you will need to extrapolate from data. For example, p6, 4p. = the article starts on page 6 and goes for four pages = 6-10.)

- After writing “Retrieved” and the date (month, day, year) the information was retrieved, write “from” give the database followed by GALILEO.

Examples:

II. Citing Articles or Essays Accessed Through the World Wide Web.

- Cite the full-text reference using the author’s name (if given) last name first, followed by first initial(s). [If no author, use four dashes.] Immediately following the author’s name put the date of publication or last revision in parentheses. If there is no date, put n.d. Next type the title of the article, no quotation marks, and capitalize only the first word. (If there is no author, put the date after the title.)

- After writing “Retrieved” and the date (month, day, year) the information was retrieved, write “from” give the database or the name of the site followed by the URL set off by < >. The URL is usually to be found in the upper right corner of the print out. It can easily be copied directly from the internet. It appears in the address line.

Examples:
